Congress didn't find time to act upon the free bridge bill, the steam car grievance, the police bill, the measure for a new post office, and various other matters of pressing District interest; but it was able to give two days to the passage of a private bill relieving Mrs. Patterson from $50,000 District taxes, because of her "high social position," as one of her eloquent advocates stated it.

The new directory of Boston indicates, according to the rules used for calculating in such cases, a population at the present time of 410,000. This shows a handsome increase since the census of 1800 was taken, when the population was set down at 362,585. The gain between 1870 and 1880 was 112,000.
